YES, DEAR, OF COURSE, DEAR: Kevin Costner wasn't all that keen on playing obsessed district attorney Jim Garrison in Oliver Stone's new film, "JFK." In fact, his wife persuaded him to take the role. "I told her I just didn't feel so strongly about this movie that I'd upset our big plans to go away together camping in the mountains with our kids," he told Vanity Fair. "She's the one who wanted me to do it. And that came as a surprise. She's never been so outspoken about something in my career. I know that she felt it was that important."

Excuse me but I got it, now who would not post this a camping tip or that?
